Raed Anis AL-JISHI

From the collection Bleeding Gull: Look Feel Fly

Infant Martyr

Since the night of shooting stars, the night of travail,
the call to prayer calms me.
Some people chant,
"Hale Loya."
It was the last supper
and the birth of a certain death.
My silicone
was oxidized with love.
I was born from a pairing of the dust of Al-Jalil and the waters of Euphrates and became the infant martyr.

Praying

If the core of rising
Is the core of kneeling, where will I direct and to what will I surrender my eyes?
Transfiguration

When the distance to stillness becomes a ticket for the passenger and there is no other trip, the port of transfiguration is caught in desertification.
Sound waves
seduce the dreams and offer the holiday bread and the flavor of new cotton while awaiting the holy Eid On the banks of silence on the side of absence.

Tunisia

A flower carried carefully by the wind, the verses of the petals are the hymns of the morning.
Time dreams about the flowing dew of intonation Like perfume touching her cheeks turning them green.
That is the dream
and the foam of its flavor is a spring of fragrance and freedom.
Turbans

Our cotton
didn't take the sun's side anymore.
The wrung-out sweat was not injected inside us as if a shiver of a poem’s smoke.
We are the shaved-off sugar top
And the dreams
In the chaotic era of turbans.

Memory’s Lisp

I stand near me
Watching that man
Come from the land far away.
We have the same lisp
In our tongue and in our memory.
He went through me,
And I didn’t notice
He stole my poems
And placed a knife
On the edge of my lips.

An Affair

The frozen water
in my eyes,
which was scratched
by a cat of time
is changing the spring I desire,
my vinegary dreams,
and the songs that love me into a one-night affair.

Aging Love

The language of love is spontaneous, like me, like a painting of a child.
I used to draw my house on the left side of the paper.
My house was so small,
neither doors nor windows,
On the sands of aging.

Beirut Nights

I am gambling
in the Beirut night.
I need two numbers
melded together.
I never asked any dice
about its color,
where it was made,
or about its birthday
in gambling.
Some games are red lines of revolutions, a dot of enlightenment
a calendar of life.

The prisoner

Surrounded by the walls of memory with no lover
and nothing to remember I mock
my triangular cuffs
and the illusion
of hands in a circle.
An iron cage of emotions and a jail of ironic melodies.

Jailed but Free

I roll up.
I smoke the pulse of the minute.
I inject my hand
with heroin of love.
No one can shut me up.
My flying poems
hide themselves
in the pack of hearts, seeding their poppy seed in their cells
to grow like my words do, Drunk and crazy.
My Right

It is my right
to love as she wants it, to get ripped by desire when her necklace scatters the tears of pearls.
It is a riot,
and it is my right
to love and die
the way she wants it.

Religion Is Love

Distances are empty
between us.
Prayers are love,
and when I get drunk
by desire
I forget from which amulet I wrote myself
using its bloody saffron and which I use
to erase myself.
Red is another language, and I can’t speak it anymore.

Crucified Languages
In the theater of time
crucified on my language, watching the birds
falling onto my song, stealing pieces of bread from my melody,
what does its meaning
Prepare for me?
The nails of its tones bleed my rhyming soul while its hopes shatter my hands, and my questions are unable to hammer a dream.

Blindness

Their identikits are a mystery.
I couldn’t recognize them by the reflection of the wind
Nor by the sensors
On my blind stick.
They walked by me
with sympathy.
“Your son looks like you,”
one of them said,
leaving me
on the pavement of silence.
What does he look like?
Did he like it?
What do I look like?
What is the meaning of the identikits?
Why can't I have a simple answer for a simple question?
What is the difference between white and black?

The Gulls’ Chant

I drink
the low-fat morning death.
I begin it by eating dates.
How many times did
the dates immigrate us?

How many times did death strip the conscience of silence with the sand locusts?
Locusts that can't understand the chant of the gulls or the whispers
of the sea waves.

Dilmun

And I see peasants singing along the milky road alongside a bull that didn’t know what a plow looks like.
And beggars,
desert sharpeners
like a flock of cheating strings, bleeding from their wounds with their long red beards, hooked noses
and a mass of noise.

The East Gate

Like a dervish
I am flattered by poems, emotions, spitting the coffee
in the longing coffee.
From the east,
the last gate of escape, I looked upon us
in the froth.
I saw us
in the reflection
of a young color,
singing the impossible in the womb of the angel of extinction.

Masks
I cannot recognize myself
If I don’t wear me.
Faces are deceiving
without their masks,
like that bleeding
white gulf.

The Holy Book

In the beginning
love was a gift from God.
Its law melts as words.
Its eve was the tone of the letters.
Adam was not there
but a sheet containing the fate of all lovers.

Serving a Smile

We have a modest tradition of hospitality.
Our Arabian coffee
doesn’t need sugar
or cardamom
to be tasty or delightful just like the smile
we serve
to those passing by.
Imam Hussain
Like a stem cell,
the infant universe
grows inside you,
like a martyr star.
You will get killed
but your light
will live forever.
And like a Sumerian cup, you will die thirsty
while the rivers of life will always rise from your hand.

The Third Eye

There is a holy spot
bher eyes
where angels burn their feathers And lose their faith.
Do not blame me.

Autism Girls

An autistic girl searching for the spring between the black clouds—her braids are made from a shining rose branch.
Her dreams are made from a shining rose.
But who will listen to the scent?
Her smile
could light the darkness but one question haunts her.
Why are they saying “her”
when they talk about me?
Have I vanished?!
Have I?
A hush—
then she melts
like a flower in the snow.

Stranger Citizens

They vanished
like our palm trees.
Ancient open windows
and old dreams.
The city forgot their names while they held its memory in their soul
like a candle
between prison bars.

Imazigh

I am a Tuareg child.
My blue turban drowns me in the waves of sadness, then expels me
like seeds of ivory.
Ol! great Tin Hinan,
your brave knight
lost his way among the salt caravans.
The Imazighen are free
No more.

A Summer’s Day

Unlike in Shakespeare’s verse, I felt the summer day.
The sun burned
my nocturnal wings
and the wind tossed me away.
My steps on the milky shore, my feathers in the sky drawing a Picasso painting, asking “What? Who cares?
And why?”

Pregnancy.

My body regularly erupts and it hurts when it does but it terrifies me with its painful time delay.
My legs don’t tremble
my back doesn’t groan, and I don't distort my smile with wailing.
I am used to that portent
and what it chooses
and what it nominates.

Breast Cancer

My kid is playing nearby and he stuns me, how he chooses my right breast and sucks my age till it swells.
I try to surprise him with my left but he squeezing the nipple with his hands and doesn't drink from it.
My child
turns a thousand meanings in my nipple.
Why is he afraid of the left?
What is it that terrifies him?
