

Kristian Sendon CORDERO

Poems translated from the Rinconada, Bikol and Filipino

About Rinconada, Bikol, and Filipino: The Bikol languages are a group of Central Philippine languages spoken mostly on the Bicol Peninsula in the island of Luzon, the neighbouring island province of Catanduanes and the island of Burias of Masbate. There is a dialect continuum between the Visayan languages and the Bikol languages; the two together are called the Bisakol languages. The Rinconada language is spoken in the 5th political district of Camarines Sur. The Filipino/Tagalog is considered as the national language of the Philippines.

Old Buddha Sitting on Nagã

DON'T mistake it for a piece of rock Cast on the wayside, and found.
 Mark the seven serpent heads, symbols
 Of wisdom rising from the ground.
 Feel its stare, the eyes are sometimes
 Shut, absolutely without pride:
 Never atone for your sins—this he has long known and will not abide—
 And you will be born again human.
 The known thief becomes a grasshopper;
 Drowned in the well the unrepentant adulterer.
 If you fear waking up a locust, you might yet
 Start now and try learning to be a poet.

*

Towards St. Elmo's Isle

IN and out, coming and going,
 the stevedores were bustling at the pier.
 Feet were racing each other unloading things needed for the fiesta.
 The boat had to leave
 before eight or it would be grounded
 by the receding tide.

For every minute of delay
 the Enchanted Rock rose out of the water—
 the magnetic islet that even the most skilled pilots feared.

Grains of sand blew in the wind and stuck to hair.
 The spray caught in the skin

of passengers
and hardened into salt.

So they chased time.
So time chased them.

*

The Universe According to the Earth

RECURRENCE does not repeat itself.

Even the same names of the dead
intoned in masses intended to redeem
and silence them—

The souls the old bell called in when the wind, fire, and water were one inside a volcano's bowels.

It cannot be repeated. This was how they blamed heaven that now stood accused. They wrapped their rage and raging raised again the towers and edifices with the black stones that were proof of the last ruinous tempest

They carved the scenes in memory:
how everything is repeatedly buried, obliterated.
The wound festers
and the rot eats the rest of the skin.

To calm human fear and fury
he returned to religion that became the new science:
Only belief in the soul shall save the body.
Everything returns to earth.

Nothing will be left of what's left.
Everything will recur but nothing will be repeated
not even prayers, not love.

This is how memory is honed, exercised. This is how the universe of man expands,
the man who would now be looking up a volcano,
questioning the season of leaves folding.

Man now knows that knowing time is just the same as scooping up the sand that covers his land.

He crushes it in his hand. Watch.
Recurrence does not repeat itself.

*

The Melancholy of the Ancient Fire

I.

It was the ancient love for fire seared the hearts of the first humans—
In the middle of kindling they found each other. Inside a cave was born all sense of belonging. Outside, tiger and bull gave chase, a python snapped up a mouse and butterflies were starting to open their wings like flowers:
yellow, white, glistening black, beneath the graying sky.

II.

The ancient love for fire was not a new religion brought to us by muscular foreigners. The sun has long been worshipped in the old realm—its heat suffused the breast: and the heart ripened.
The seed in the seedling was buried to slumber under the fragrant earth, filling the world with the seven colors of the rainbow; words were silent cries, understood like water slaking a dry throat.

III.

The ancient love for fire enters the consciousness, flesh to flesh, blood to blood.
If all the light of the ancient fire fades and we are devoured by the harshest worries—
Hush, for in the middle of the whole wide world someone will light a cigar and console himself, collecting all the memories, putting down the saddest lyrics of the people before the volcano exuding slow deliquescent fire from its full erect peak.

*

The Day a Storm with my Mother's Name Came

LUCIA, was what Father uttered at once the moment he heard news of a coming storm—
a name he looked at and looked over for all time,
as he straddled what could be sea or soil on fire*.

The wind had begun to whistle so we fixed the wall and roof together with my younger brother.
We roped the windows tight and stowed the rice
up where they wouldn't get wet in a flood.

At the other house, we could hear the static on the failing radio, the dogs were barking
and the banana plants were starting to rattle like teeth, the kapok pods were falling on the overgrown yard.

Black ants lined up in procession towards the jar
that we used to store chunks of molasses and sugared coconut flesh: Sweetness, it seemed was not taste alone, but part of scent and memory.

At the chair sat my unspeaking father, he'd been there long waiting for the spray of rain
 coming in, sunlight, song, fever, chest pain, medicine,
 and life pouring its last drops

While he looked over and uttered each of the letters
 in Mother's name, who was coming as a storm,
 a name looked at and looked over for all time
 as he straddled what could be sea or soil on fire.

*Idiom in the original which means severe suffering

*

Melancholy

YOU can't fly it in the wind,
 or it becomes a whirlwind.

You can't plant it in the earth,
 or the earth will tremble.

You can't cast it to the waves,
 or the sea will be feverish.

But you can only warm it Around the fire in the company of strangers while rubbing your palms
 together and bringing them to your face, neck, chest, forehead.

Outside dreams freeze
 and the smell of burning hair spreads.

*

Stigmata on the Tongue

THEY imprisoned the poet in the fort of female saints and there taught him prayer-poems. His first attempts produced foul utterances, words that were like stigmata on the tongue. Until they gave him the Word's flesh, Its taste could only reach the tip of his tongue. He had since discovered other words: First, that oath or promise never meant anything, courage hemorrhaged while each letter of principle, truth, or life, rotted.

Passion itself was ablaze, a ball of fire searing the linings of his throat.
 What he couldn't write was—love, it was much too cold, like long dead bread.

Translated from the Bikol and the Filipino by Marne Kilates

**

Ode to Nothingness by Way of Some ThingsTangerine*

OUTSIDE the window
a farmer teases the lightning
that become like fingers

pointing, scaring
the carabao.

While I eat,
my tongue feels the seeds
of this tart tangerine

which I throw to the ground without any hope
for an afterlife.

Shells

By the doorway
the shells
hang.

When they touch each other
because of the wind,

he longs
for the old occupants
of the house.

Glass Jars

The empty glass jars
are saved,
and cleaned

until the brittle things
end crystalline.
They are dried under the sun,

and wiped by the wind.
Then they will be placed on a tabletop.

You wonder where the force that will break them
will come from.

They stand there silent,
the finger prints
of those who cleaned them
still visible.

*

The First Burial

THE couple finally found
the dead body of their son.
He is sprawled on the farm
of his elder brother.

The father examined if there was a trace of snake bites or he was holding the fruit of the tree forbidden them.

The corpse already stinks
so the pair dug deep to return to dust what came from dust.

That night, they began to sleep
beside each other for seven days,
with the siblings. They have to multiply.

*

Prayer

*I circle around God, around the primordial tower
I've been circling for thousand of years
And I still don't know: am I a falcon
A storm or a great song?
- Rainier Maria Rilke*

When I pray
I become like a votive candle
being lit and planted on a slate.

I must admit I sense a whiff
of pride when I feel

I talk to God and He to me,
in a different way.

I also feel happy
with the marriage of faith
and doubt in me.

Sometimes, I pray as if I am only talking to myself,

like a solitary candle straining to stay burning steadily in meditation before the Almighty

Until the slate, the wick, the flame,
the wind, and god all merged in me

and leave me uncertain of who I am

whether I am a fool, a seared bud, a dove,
or an unfinished poem.

Translated from the Rinconada, the Filipino and the Bikol by Frank Penoñes Jr.

---

About the Translators:

Frank Peñones Jr. is one of Bikol's respected literary icons. He has received writing and study grants from the University of the Philippines, Cultural Center of the Philippines and the Ford International. Author of Ragang Rinaranga: Rawitdawit/Poems (2005) published by Agnus Press in Naga City, he has won several times in the Saint Peter Baptist Catholic Mass Media Awards, 2005 Premio Tomas Arejola Para Sa Literaturang Bikol, the Palanca, the Sumagang Awards For Literature and Journalism and is one of the recipients of Outstanding Bikolano Artists Awards for 2009. He recently finished his MFA at San Jose State University in California.

Marne Kilates is an award-winning poet, translator, communications consultant, and former advertising copywriter and creative director. He has published six books of poetry, the latest of which are Lyrical Objects (UST Publishing House, 2016), and Time's Enchantment & Other Reflections (Ateneo de Naga University Press, 2015). He has won the Don Carlos Palanca Memorial Awards, National Book Awards, and the Southeast Asia (S.E.A.Write) Award given by the King of Thailand. He has translated into English numerous books by leading poets writing in the national language, including National Artists for Literature Virgilio S. Almario (Rio Alma) and Bienvenido Lumbera. Kilates was the holder of the Henry Lee Irwin Professorial Chair for Creative Writing (Poetry) at the Ateneo de Manila University for academic year 2011-2012. He was named Poet of the Year in the Philippines Graphic Nick Joaquin Literary Awards in 2013. In 2014, he was honored as an Outstanding Citizen for the Literary Arts in his home province of Albay.

*